Brain Tumors: A Grim Diagnosis

Brain tumors are aggressive, have a high risk for relapse and are often deadly. Patients who are diagnosed with a brain tumor will endure several surgeries, chemo/radiation treatments, and suffer from a decline in neurological function. This causes tremendous strain on them as well as on their families and caretakers.

Help us support this grossly underfunded silent killer. With your help, we can help fund the research that will hopefully one day lead to a cure.

You Can Make A Difference

Join The Battle Against Brain Tumors

- An estimated 86,970 new cases of primary malignant and non-malignant brain and other CNS tumors are expected to be diagnosed in the United States in 2019. This includes an estimated 26,170 primary malignant and 60,800 non-malignant that are expected to be diagnosed in the US in 2019.*
- An estimated 3,720 new cases of childhood primary malignant and non-malignant brain and other CNS tumors are expected to be diagnosed in the US in 2019.*
